DISSERTATION WORK

Dissertation: New Exact Methods For Scheduling Multi Mode Multiple Resource Constrained Project Scheduling Problems

The dissertation studies the multi mode multiple resource constrained project scheduling problem (MM-RCPS) for an exact solution, deploying breadth-first and best-first tree search approaches with pruning rules while retaining the optimality of the solution. The algorithms perform better than the best existing exact algorithm by Sprecher and Drexel (1998) on standard test problem sets of the PSPLIB. We, further, adopt our breadth-first approach for implementation on a compute-cluster with SMP (Shared Memory Processors) architecture. The implementation shows promising improvement in time taken to solve the PSPLIB problem instances with the increase in number of processors deployed to solve the problems.

RESEARCH INTERESTS

Combinatorial optimization, Exact solution tree search algorithms, Multi-objective solution algorithms, and high performance compute cluster (HPCC, multi processor) algorithms for NP-hard problems, technology adoption and absorption, cable and wireless networking, ERP implementation, Societal adoption and implications of emerging technologies, Advanced Spreadsheet Modelling and VBA, Big Data, Cryptocurrencies, Dark Web.
